

The 90-second walk-in pitch

INTERNAL — for BitePerk use on venue visits. Don't hand this one over.

0–10s · The opener

“Hi — I'm Sam, I run a Sydney company called BitePerk. Quick question while you've got 30 seconds: on a busy Friday night, who answers your phone?”

Wait. Let THEM say 'nobody / whoever's free / it goes to voicemail'. That answer is the pitch.

10–30s · The pain

“That's every venue we talk to. The calls you miss at 7pm Friday are bookings — and the group bookings and functions almost always come by phone. They don't leave a voicemail; they book somewhere else.”

Keep it about THEIR revenue, not our tech. No jargon yet.

30–60s · The demo

“Rather than pitch you — call this number. It's Bella, our AI host. Ask her for a table for six tonight.”
[Hand them the demo card — (02) 7501 1140 — and let them dial on THEIR phone.]

This is the close. Stay quiet while they listen. Their eyebrows are the buying signal.

60–80s · How it lands

“That's exactly what your customers would hear — except she'd have your menu, your hours, your rules. You keep your number, she answers every call or just the ones your team can't get to. You see every booking live.”

Price answer: 'flat monthly plan, free first week, no per-call fees.' Never quote infra costs.

80–90s · The ask

“Can I grab 15 minutes with you Monday? I'll set Bella up for your venue and you can hear her answering as YOU. What's the best number and time?”

Get the mobile + a time slot before you leave. Leave the brochure either way.

Objections you'll hear — and the honest answer

INTERNAL — every answer below is true. Never oversell past these.

“We already have someone answering.”

Great — Bella can take only the calls they can't get to: peak service, breaks, after close. She's the backup that never goes home.

“Will customers know it's AI? Accents?”

She's trained on Australian English — suburbs and street names right. Most callers just notice the phone always gets answered. And you heard her yourself just now.

“What if she gets a booking wrong?”

She doesn't guess. Anything unclear becomes a message + callback for your team — a callback, never a wrong booking. Every call is transcribed so you can check.

“We use OpenTable / Now Book It.”

Bookings land in the VoxTable dashboard today; integrations with the major platforms are on the roadmap. Your existing system keeps working — Bella catches the calls it can't.

“What's it cost? Lock-in?”

Simple flat monthly plan — no per-call fees, free first week, month-to-month, cancel any time and your data is exported within 24 hours. Exact plan tailored on the 15-minute setup call.

“Where does the data go?”

Processed and stored in Australia, Privacy Act compliant, never used to train models outside BitePerk. Support is in Sydney — not an overseas help desk.

Golden rule: the demo sells, we just steer. If in doubt — hand them the phone and dial (02) 7501 1140.